Research Profile

My primary research examines the production and consumption of language to advance psychological theories on motivation, social perception, and persuasion. This work employs laboratory experiments, natural language processing and text analysis methods, and/or analysis of field data using a variety of quantitative techniques (e.g., multi-variate regression, panel estimators, topic modeling or word embeddings, network analysis).

My research offers insights for marketers and consumers who want to understand the consumption-related information people share through social media, online reviews, email, and in customer service interactions. It can also help marketers improve how they “speak” with, and to, consumers. Finally, I examine how language itself is consumed as a product (e.g., song lyrics, academic articles).
