Research Profile

My research examines the consumption and production of language to advance psychological theories on motivation, social perception, and persuasion. I employ laboratory experiments, natural language processing and text analysis methods, and/or analysis of field data using a variety of quantitative approaches (e.g., multi-variate regression, panel estimators, topic modeling, word embeddings, network analysis).

This work offers insights for marketers, consumers and policymakers on the consumption-related information people share through social media, online reviews, email, and when they speak with company representatives (e.g., salespeople, call center workers). It also helps marketers improve how they communicate with, and to, consumers through a variety of mediums. Finally, I examine how and why language itself is consumed as a product (e.g., song lyrics, academic articles).
